

speaking for airports

WWF's report paints a false picture of business aviation, says the Airport Operators Association.

“Good airport infrastructure is vital to service the needs of businesses of all kinds. This can only be provided through sustainable expansion and improvement of our already overstretched facilities”

16th May 2008

BAA Edinburgh spokesman Donald Morrison said: “A whole range of factors are behind the drop in passenger numbers. Airlines have been reducing capacity because of a reduction in demand, and increasing use of video conferencing technology rather than taking flights to meetings has definitely been an impact of the credit crunch as companies cut down on business travel.”

“Video Killed the passenger numbers” ,The Scotsman, 11 July 2008

for a living planet

Thank you

